THE SAVING OF PETER

BY EUGENIE ULRICH

Copyright, 1917, by Eugenie Ulrich

Mrs. Minna Schmitt stood at the kitchen door of Merriman's big house and looked out into the street. At every moment the light was growing fainter and duller, and still Peter Burns did not come in to the supper that had been waiting for him over two hours. This was strange of Peter, and it would have been not only strange but also dangerous of any other man after having been "letting in" all afternoon with the "old time," Mrs. Mer-min's. I'm thankful we had a right good supper over at Harwood's," she thought, "but I'm a widow, I feel asleep. It's too bad you missed the cows an' I did that work."

"Oh, that didn't make much difference," said Minna. But there seemed to be something that did, so after a bit Peter came up on again:

"The judge is a terrible man to drink an' treat all round' when he goes 'lection time.' He gimme a couple of bottles of whisky to drink with him, but I met old Anse in the road this mornin', an' he told me one of the children was sick an' he didn't feel very well himself, an' so I gave him the rest."

Peter told the little nurse that he was clearing himself without admitting the suspicion, which is really a very delicate thing to do. So he was too surprised to see Minna jump around in her seat and fairly scream at him:

rian's husband. Mrs. Schmidt did not like the judge. The worst part in her eyes was those who always seen so nice and pleasant to everybody and between times get drunk and annoy their wives. If such a man would marry all the women of the village would not blame their wives for everything that goes wrong, as the judge was. Mrs. Schmidt was angry and the old judge bound over to keep the peace. Since that time the judge had been obliged to live at the village hotel. Mrs. Schmidt was very angry about the big house. Now when the judge wanted to see Mrs. Merriam he drove up to the gate and whistled for her. Then Mrs. Merriam came out, unlocked the door and went driving with him, for the judge was really very pleasant when he was in a "good temper," as Mrs. Merriam would have said. One day Mrs. Every evening she made Peter drive down to the hotel to see that the judge got to bed without any trouble. She was very angry when she saw that he could out of his practice, and Mrs. Merriam paid her own out of the place and the judge was given a new residence she paid an addition of the judge's.

"Who did you think?"

"Gave it to old Anne for the child,"

"Oh, yes, I remember," for the sick child; "I'll kill it."

"But it was good stuff," said Peter blandly. "The judge paid a dollar a bottle of wine."

"But it's bad; I know it's bad. Hurry up and tell Anne it's bad," Peter only stared and saw and asked the horseman to stop. "Hurry up," she said and rattled the whip in its socket. At this ominous and unaccounted-for silence, Mrs. Merriam suddenly, that the judge had to pull them to their harnesses to keep them out of the ditch.

"I'll drive a step, I'll tell you," he said, "until I know what's for." For Peter could not stand bothering the horses when he was driving. Then Mrs. Merriam pulled the reins as well as the horses was bothered.

"But, Mrs. Schmidt," he said, "sure, you're always such a sensible woman."

"What's the use to be a sensible woman when a man's so foolish! It's all your fault, Peter. You're a horse."

"And if it's all I'll be driving"

Minna's quick fingers to see any one untidy on Sunday if she could help it. So she was not surprised when she saw that she was curious or, even worse, worried. Things did look queer. The road wagon was standing in the driveway, and the seat and cushions were wet, and Peter's coat lay crumpled on the ground. After a moment Minna's sharp ear heard deep breathing, and then on a bench near the carriage she saw a man asleep. Now Minna could not believe that any man would so fast asleep on a bench, and she happened to do something wrong. But she was used to doing things, not standing and looking at them. She took the cushion off the bench and put it on the ground. She got it into the carriage seat. Something lay in one of Peter's pockets struck her hand, and she knew it was once for all. She was actually looking at the contents were not to be mistaken. Then she tried the other pocket. He looked rather foolish.

"That candel of a judge," she muttered. "He has five stomachs, and he

"It screamed Minna. "Peter, you mean?"
"Peter! Oh, Peter, Peter, you, too!"
Peter, walked Mrs. Merriam as she sank down in a chair. "Just wait; this is the first time, and there is still hope for you. I will make you a new start. I will turn you to her medicine shelf and come back with a bottle with some brown stuff in it. This will make you a new start in life. I will turn any elction whack, Minna."
Minna obeyed and then milked the complaining cows, crown restless wait-saying something else."

Mrs. Schmitt," he said then, "I've been thinking about how worried you got about them bottles. It's kind of nice to think people care enough about you. Now, I've been thinkin' there might be nice things to take than peace, an' sometimes it's the nice things that are the best for a man. Do you think so?"
Peter stopped and dug his pickaxe into the ground. Minna's literal German came back to her.
"What would you take, then, Peter?"
"Well, now, Minna, if I 'were left to me I'd take you."
Mrs. Merriam, who pointed out precedent and evidence to prove that Minna had strangely inverted her opinion, said to Peter with Peter just to save him, to be sure.

Weymouth in the Files, Chapter 3.

March 4th, 1853, Franklin Pierce was inaugurated president; he was the youngest man who had taken the presidential oath. He did not read his address but spoke without manuscript or notes in a distinct and a graceful manner. In his address he alluded to the death of his only child, a bright boy of thirteen, by a railroad accident happening in the early part of January while travelling with his father.

Some Weymouth journals criticised that allusion as a trick of the orator to awaken personal interest before unfolding his public policy. Cheers and noise of cannon greeted the president when he closed his address, typical of the joy of the Democrats on their restoration to power. On the inauguration of Pierce the removal of the Whigs from office commenced. Among others was Mr. Wales, who, when his four years was finished, was removed and Mr. Elijah F. Hall was appointed to succeed him. As I remember the people of the village were well satisfied with the election of Pierce, the Democratic party being in the ascendancy; the Democrats had voted for Sumner in the coalition of the previous year generally voted for Pierce.

The great hall at the new town hall was attended by all, Whigs, Democrats and Free Soilers; the last had made no poor showing in the presidential campaign they seemed of little consequence compared with the Whigs. Hawthorne, who had been a member of the Salem Custom House by President Taylor, was a great friend of President Pierce, and was brought in favor with many from his acquaintance, as Hawthorne was our favorite New England writer. He said on his removal from the Custom House, "I was without something like a regret and shame that I saw my own chances of retaining office to be better than those of my Democratic brethren, but who can see an inch into the future, beyond his nose; my own head was the only one that I could see."

It was a moment when a man's head of office is seldom or never the most agreeable of his life. Pierce named his friend Hawthorne consul to Liverpool. He at first shrank from accepting the post from his friend as it seemed too much to require of him for his campaign biography of Pierce, out of the public purse, and argument was needed to change his mind. The loss of his place in the Salem Custom House impelled Hawthorne to write "The Scarlet Letter."

The consulate general of Weymouth was to visit Europe and enabled him to write "Our Old Home."

In 1853 was the world's fair in New York, suggested by the London Exhibition of 1851. The building was called the Crystal Palace, and was the most magnificent design. The most graceful commentator on passing events was in cheerful rivalry met all the nations as of old Kings met upon a field of Cloth of Gold.

In the September of this year I was married and made a journey to New York to see the world's fair. I was in New York when the war was on, and I left the village, were covered with buildings, lumber, etc., were in ashes, having been burned completely over. The old steam mill that I had known so long gone with the rest. The fire caught. It was thought at the time, from the crew of one of the coasters for some reason living in one of the empty sheds on the wharf. This was by far the largest fire Weymouth had seen, sweeping everything from the R. R. depot to the mill.

In 1854 was the convention of the constitution. Mr. Charles E. Hunt was a member from this place. Boutwell says the convention of 1853 was the ablest body of men that ever met in Massachusetts. Rufus Choate was in the convention and he was a former mayor of Boston. Mr. Ezra Faneuil gave a lecture on "Constitution."

He can now see the old gentleman limping up the aisle to the pulpit, he was lame. His lecture was so dry or scholarly few were interested and he was bored. He was a former mayor of Boston. Mr. Ezra Faneuil gave a lecture on "Constitution."

A court of inquiry died that no one was at fault for the grounding of the battleship Illinois on the coast of Norway and she the steering gear was out of order and it should have been discovered before leaving port.

By means of the public bath, houses in Quincy some of the young ladies of that city are becoming expert divers and swimmers and in these days of canoeing, boating, and yachting, it is an accomplishment which every girl as well as boy should acquire.

Letter to M. H. Male.
East Weymouth, Mass.
Dear Sir: No man more interested in the book and war of the paint on the houses you build than I; not even the owner, not even the painter.

And painters sometimes are suspected of being more concerned for the look than the wear. What is your opinion? Which pays best, for a painter to have his paint last three years, or as long as he can? He can have it last six, if he wants to.

Lead and oil lasts three; Devco lead and zinc lasts six. Of course, conditions affect the time of both.

Most painters think that zinc is thoroughly ground in oil; the proportions are right, and the mixture is thorough. No painter need mix; he can afford to hand-work can't compete with machine work. He runs no risk with Devco lead and zinc.

All interests lie in using it; yours, the owner's, the painter's unless he wants his paint to wear half as long.

The United States. This bill was in violation of the Missouri compromise—Douglas spoke till daylight when the vote was taken, 37 in favor and 1 against. This was popular or squatter sovereignty, so-called. On Monday, May 22, the House passed the Kansas-Nebraska bill by 113 yeas to 103 nays. The bill was approved by the president. May 30th, this bill would the doom of the Whig party and caused the formation of the Republican party.

I write this much of this famous bill as it was the all encompassing theme, interesting all in the village. On May 24th, Anthony Burns, a negro, who had escaped from slavery some three months before, was arrested in Boston. He was taken to the United States court room for examination before Commissioner Loring.

Richard H. Darr, Jr., chance to pass the courthouse at about nine o'clock, saw what was going on, went in and offered Burns his professional services. Burns declined them saying "they will swear to me and get me back and I shall have to go back, my master knows me, his agent knows me, I must go back I want to go as easily as I can." But Parker said "it will do no harm to make a defense."

"Well," said Burns, "do as you are minded to." He seemed stupefied with fear.

On Friday morning the 25th a call for a meeting at Faneuil Hall that evening was issued. A crowd gathered and was addressed by Phillips and Parker and great excitement. Phillips moved they adjourn to Court square where a mob of negroes were attempting to rescue Burns. There they found a small party under the lead of T. W. Higginson, who, with a stick of similar use as a battering ram, were attempting to break down one of the doors of the court house. It became an angry crowd of two thousand bent on the rescue of Burns. A break was made in the door but the place was defended. In the meantime the police were killed and Higginson wounded by a sabre cut.

Several were arrested, after which no further attempt was made to break into the court house. This attack enabled the marshal to appear as a victor of the day. The day Burns was sent out of Boston, the town was full of people coming from all parts of Massachusetts—a body of police and twenty-two men of the militia, one platoon of marines, one hundred and twenty-five police guarding the fugitive, three platoons of the militia, and a full regiment of the militia, the town was full of people coming from all parts of Massachusetts.

The procession was made up of one of artillery battalion, one platoon of marines, one hundred and twenty-five police guarding the fugitive, three platoons of the militia, and a full regiment of the militia, the town was full of people coming from all parts of Massachusetts.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Will ride with the President. Senator Warren of Wyoming has planned to give President Roosevelt a joint in the saddle across the plains and mountains during his western trip this summer. It is expected that the president will visit Wyoming while clean and cool.

Winning around the circle. The senator has arranged that he shall leave his train soon after it is well into the state and take to the saddle. Accompanied by the senator and other congenial spirits, all men accustomed to riding a sweep of a hundred or more miles across the state, including a stretch of mountain road, will be made to connect with the presidential train at a point near the western boundary of the state.

Pen picture of Mary MacLane. Mary Elizabeth MacLane, the remarkable girl who has just come before the literary world in her book, "The Story of Mary MacLane," is as erratic as her story and as much of a puzzle to her family as to others, says an exchange. In appearance this young, inexperienced, suddenly famous authoress is good looking, and in spite of her extreme individuality, there is no evidence of it. Miss MacLane is of pleasant, unassuming manner, notwithstanding the fact that her conversation is filled with statements and assertions of the most egotistical nature, such as her repeated reminders that she is a genius, that she is exceedingly odd, that she is wicked, that she is lacking in principle and moral nature, that she has no virtue or that she is a thief and a liar.

Miss MacLane is of medium height, slender of build, with light brown hair and a peculiar and indeliberately cold grayish eye. Her manner is languid, and her conversation is not animated, in spite of the contrary impression it would give in print. She will say "I would kill that man if I had a gun" in the same commonplace tone that she would assume in observing that the sun was shining.

Chamberlain's System Explained. Memory for faces is frequently a subject of comment in the house of commons. Recently he was passing the sobbing and heartily greeted a new member whom he had only met once before some years ago at a political meeting. The legislator, highly flattered, boasted of his distinction to a friend in the smoking room. "Wonderful memory Chamberlain has got," he murmured.

"He remarked his friend dryly: "he asked me who you were yesterday."

The Queen Wife. Next to the afflicted king himself the most interesting personality in the serious illness of Edward VII. and the queen, the town was full of people coming from all parts of Massachusetts.

Letter to M. H. Hale.

East Weymouth, Mass.

Dear Sir: No man is more interested in the look and wear of the paint on the houses you build than I; not even the owner, not even the painter.

And painters sometimes are suspected of being more concerned for the look than the wear. What is your opinion? Which pays best, for a painter to have his paint last three years, or as long as he can? He can have it last six, if he wants to.

Lead and oil lasts three; Devco Lead and Zinc lasts six. Of course, conditions affect the time of both.

Most painters know that zinc is thoroughly ground in oil; the proportions are right, and the mixture is thorough.

No painter need mix; he can afford to. Devco Lead can't compete with machine work. He runs no risk with Devco Lead and Zinc.

All interests lie in using it; yours, the owner's, the painter's—unless he wants his paint to wear half as long.

Yours Truly,

P. W. Devco & Co.

NEVER STAND BETWEEN TREES OR POLES AND MOTION TO THE MOTORMAN. It is hard for you to see you, especially in the night. Stand in the roadway and then he will be sure and see you.

CARD OF THANKS
I wish to extend my most sincere thanks to the police officers and friends who presented me with these tokens of their esteem on July 21. It was a complete surprise to me and will not soon be forgotten.
